Baby Boy, Five Weeks Old Found On Door Step of Wood Street Home

BABY BOY FOUND ON DOORSTEP BY BRISTOL WOMAN

Infant, 5 Weeks Old, Warmly Clothed and Wrapped in Blankets

HAD A SUPPLY OF FOOD

Mrs. Ella Smith, 308 Wood Street, Makes Discovery
at 10.45 P. M.

The five weeks old baby boy found on the doorstep by Mrs. Ella Smith, 308 Wood street, last night, is doing very well today in the Harriman Hospital where nurses and physicians are bestowing kind and loving care upon the young man.

The baby was found in an ordinary splint market basket by Mrs. Smith as she went to lock her front door, before retiring. It was about 10.45 when Mrs. Smith went to the door of her home which is opposite the Wood street public school building. It is her custom to open the door before locking it and when she did this she saw a white object resting on the door sill.
"At first I thought that it was a dog," says Mrs. Smith. "Then I stepped back into the hallway and flashed on the electric light which revealed the market basket."

Mrs. Smith took the basket into the house and gently folding back the blankets found stowed beneath a fine healthy looking baby of about five weeks of age. The infant is of apparent American parentage and has dark hair but none too much. The little fellow was sleeping soundly and was not disturbed.

The police were called and took the youngster to the Harriman Hospital where he immediately won the affections of doctors and nurses who are doing everything in their power to make him comfortable.

The clothing of the child was spotless as was all of the other contents of the basket. An extra supply of wearing apparel was tucked in the bottom of the basket. There was a clean nursing bottle and also a glass jar half filled with food. The child was wrapped in three blankets, some with blue and others with pink borders.

Pinned to the blankets was this note:

"Take care of my little baby brother and God will bless you. Our mother died when he was born."

The note was unsigned and was scribbled in handwriting to resemble that of a child.

The door step of the Smith home is directly along the street which is considerably traveled. There is a street light diagonally across the street but this is shaded at this time of year by the trees. The basket was not on the step at 10 o'clock and no strange noises were heard by Mrs. Smith who was at home throughout the entire evening.

"I am glad I opened the door, before locking it," says Mrs. Smith, thinking that had she done otherwise the infant would not have been discovered until this morning.

HEAVY RAIN DELAYS HOP-OFF OF GRAF

Passengers Disembark and Preparations are Made For A Mid-Day Get-Away

HOPE FOR CLEAR SKIES

By Aroxellas Galvao
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

PERNAMBUCO, May 28.—Held prisoners for three hours by a tropical cloudburst, the giant dirigible Graf Zeppelin got off on its long flight to the United States by way of Havana, Cuba, today at 11.15 a. m. local time (10.15 a. m. eastern daylight time).

The hop-off originally had been scheduled for 8 a. m. local time but the Graf was unable to get away from its mooring mast on the Jeguia air field here because of driving rain.

The skies cleared, however, about 10 o'clock and the passengers took their places in the cabin gondola for the second time. Little difficulty was experienced in starting the air monarch on its 4,500 mile flight on the second attempt.

PERNAMBUCO, May 28.—(INS)—A heavy rain which shrouded the Jeguia air field here today prevented the giant German dirigible Graf Zeppelin from making its scheduled hop-off for the United States via Havana.

Attempts to get the huge ship away from its mooring mast at 8 a. m. (7 a. m. Eastern Daylight Time) failed.
The passengers were disembarked and preparations begun for a mid-day start, when it is hoped the weather will have cleared.

Owing to the incessant rain, which had swept the field from the early hours of the morning, the Graf could not lift its huge bulk from the mooring mast, even though Commander Dr.
Hugo Eckener had expressed his intention of taking off on time in spite of the unfavorable weather.

Immediately after the passengers had disembarked, the ground crew began pumping an additional supply of lifting gas into the bag of the dirigible, in order to make the take-off possible this afternoon even if the rain has not ceased.

The bad weather failed to prevent a large crowd from being on hand in the hope of witnessing the Graf's takeoff. Keen disappointment was expressed by passengers and spectators alike, when the air monarch, which had successfully conquered oceans and continents, was held prisoner by the tropical rains of South America.

Dr. Eckener expressed the hope that the weather would clear by midday, and the passengers were told to be ready for a start at that time.

Dr. Eckener was visibly cheered, however, when the rain stopped at 10 o'clock (9 a. m. eastern daylight saving time). He ordered the passengers back into the cabin gondola immediately, and hopes were held out that a new start could be made within an hour.

FIELD CROPS VALUE IS ESTIMATED AT HUGE SUM

State Department Says Total Will Exceed Eight
Eastern States

BUCKS COUNTY IS FIFTH

HARRISBURG, May 28.—The value of principal field crops produced in Pennsylvania during 1929 exceeds the combined totals of seven other eastern states—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut and Delaware, according to the estimates of the Federal-State Crop Reporting Service. The Pennsylvania total was $210,703,000.

Eight Pennsylvania counties each grew important crops valued at more than $5,000,000 in 1929 and only six produced less than $1,000,000 worth of these crops. Lancaster county farms raised almost twice as much in crop value as the state of Delaware, and 29 counties each produced more than the entire state of Rhode Island.

The value of the principal farm crops in Bucks county last year totaled $6,985,490 and the county stood fifth among the 67 counties of the state.

Pinchot's Majority Shows An Increase

PHILADELPHIA, May 28.—(INS)—
The official count of the May 20th Primary election vote throughout the State is steadily increasing. Gifford Pinchot's plurality over Francis Shunk Brown, Sr., the defeated gubernatorial candidate, returns showed today.

The official tabulations from 56 of the 67 counties in the state already have been completed and these results combined with the unofficial returns from the other 11 counties give Pin-chot a plurality of 15,676. The totals are: Pinchot 633,796 and Brown 618, 120.

In Chester County alone the tall Pike County forester gained 162 votes while Brown lost 79 ballots. Phillips, the wet candidate, however, showed the largest gain in this county with a total of 200. The figures are: Pinchot 10,110; Brown 12,711 and Phillips 2831.

The official count in Philadelphia also cut a number of votes away from Brown's total, but the Philadelphia County recheck is not yet completed.

S. Davis Wilson, Philadelphia leader of the Pinchot faction, asserts he will ask that the ballot boxes in at least 500 of the city's 1599 election divisions be re-opened and counted again. He believes the recount will add more votes to Pinchot's total.

BOTH SIDES TELL STRIKE STORIES TO JUDGE KELLER

Final Hearing in Injunction Proceedings Held Before The Court

POSTPONE DISPOSITION

Scores of Pages of Testimony Will Have to Be Transcribed

DOYLESTOWN, May 28.—Judge William H. Keller heard the testimony yesterday in the final hearing of the injunction proceedings brought by the Hulmeville Hosiery Company against the South Langhorne branch of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers and a group of pickets who formerly worked at the mill.

Disposition of the case was postponed until the testimony can be transcribed by the Court stenographer. Counsel for the mill owner, William H. Satterthwaite, of Doylestown, asked the Court to grant a permanent injunction against the union workers who picket in front of the mill daily.

Former Senator Webster Grim, of Doylestown, attorney for the strikers and the union asked the Court to dismiss the proceedings because of the fact that the picketing has been within the law in that it has been peaceful and not of a harmful nature to the mill operation.

Scores of pages of testimony were taken at the hearing yesterday. During the morning the mill owner's side was presented and at the afternoon session the strikers told their story.
It was testified by a number of witnesses that stones were thrown and that crowds congregated in front of the mill numbering 200 and that present employees were called "skunks" and "scabs" by the picketers.

Raymond R. Thomas, of Philadelphia, one of the union helpers that formerly worked at the mill, was called by the plaintiff for cross-examination. He said the "disturbance" was not a strike but described it as a lock-out. He told Judge Keller that a strike had not been authorized by the South Langhorne Branch of the union, in this case.

The Court asked Thomas to describe a lockout. The witness stated that a lockout is where the employer and employee have some trouble and cannot agree and the employer closes down the mill.

"Do you mean to say that an employer must be denied the right to do as he pleases?" the Court asked Thomas.

"No, he cannot be denied the right to close down the mill, but we have a right to present our side," the witness answered.

Arthur Kauffman, Hulmeville, an employee of the mill now, testified that he was hit by someone of the crowd that mingled with the defendant picketers. Oscar Harrison, the mill watchman, named a number of persons who threw stones during the various demonstrations.

Rose Schemele, a mill employee testified that she was attacked by two strikers who pulled her hair and

CROYDON WINS AGAIN; ST. ANN'S IN SLUMP

Triple Tie Now Exists in the Twilight League For Third Position

CROYDON LOOKS GOOD

Schedule for Tonight
A. O. H. versus INDEPENDENTS
Last Night's Result
CROYDON...5 ST. ANN'S... 3
(By T. M. Juno)

St. Ann's dropped its fourth straight game here last night when Croydon Boys' Club walked home with its second consecutive victory. The final figures were 6-3.

By winning, Croydon goes into a triple tie with the Independents and A. O. H. for third place in the league.

The defeat places the "Saints" deeper into the cellar. The Dorrance street boys have not won a contest this season.

Wilson Holland's twirling was the highlight of the game. He gave up but four hits and was very tight in the pinches. Only one of the "Saints" runs was earned, the other two were the result of bad throwing with men on the sacks. Holland struck out twelve men.

Reese, the other half of the battery, aided his mate by nabbing three would-be base stealers.

Whyne did not do so bad on the mound for the losers and with a little better help from his cohorts may have won the game. In two games Whyne has struck out eighteen batters.

Lake, of Croydon, finally found his battering eye, connecting for a double and two singles. He drove in two of the winners' six runs and scored twice himself.

All of the visitors' hits were made in three innings, the third, fifth and sixth. In these frames the winning runs were counted as a result of bunched hits.

The fielding feature of the game was Missera's catch of Crossley's foul fly in the third inning with two men on the sacks.

Score by innings:
First—Lake flied to Roe; Trindle struck out; Tritschler walked, and stole second; Gleason fanned.

Gilardi was hit by a pitched ball; Gilardi stole second and continued to third and to the plate on Reese's bad throw to second; Pieo was called out on strikes; Angelo was passed; Roe singled to right, and was trapped between first and second when he tried to stretch the hit; Angelo, seeing Roe trapped, made a dash to the plate and was out. Tritschler to Reese, Roe getting back to first in safety; Bracco fanned.

Second—Crossley, Reese and Hamm flied to Gilardi, Missera and Roe, respectively.

Missera whiffed; Tosti hit to Holland and was thrown out at first; Di-Tanna also fanned.

Third—Bock singled to deep short and continued to second on Bracco's error; Holland died swinging; Lake doubled to left, counting Bock; Trindle singled past third base, Lake scor-

MORRIS ADMITS HE ROBBED 2 PLACES HERE IN BRISTOL

Former Resident Says He Entered Cameron's Drug Store And Chevrolet Agency

MAY HAVE DONE MORE

Pastor Partly Identifies Him As His Assailant in Hold-Up

Milton W. Morris, 26, once a resident on North Radcliffe street, here, and who is now in the custody of the Philadelphia police charged with being implicated in 30 or more robberies told the Philadelphia authorities today that he had robbed two places in Bristol.

Morris was questioned by the Philadelphia police at the instance of Chief of Police Jones of Bristol who went to Philadelphia after Morris' arrest to check up his career. Jones has also been working with the Philadelphia detectives for the last 10 days aiding in checking up Morris' movements while a resident here.

According to Philadelphia police Morris says that he robbed both the Chevrolet Agency and Cameron's Drug Store here.

Morris denies that he had anything to do with robbing the residence of Dr. J. Fred Wagner or that of Charles LaPolla. Both of these burglaries were committed at about the same time. In fact there was a series of five robberies committed within a short space of time.

The Chevrolet Agency was robbed on May 6th when the safe was broken open and $65 taken. Hammer and chisel was used to force the safe.

At the Cameron drug store $21 was taken and also some merchandise.

Morris was a frequent trader in the Harriman shopping district and all of the merchants knew him. He was not suspected. He bought freely and paid cash.

Chief Jones has lodged a warrant against him for the two robberies he has admitted.

An old automobile is to be fished from the Delaware river in the back of the residence where Morris used to reside here and the engine number traced.

It is said that Morris stole a new Pierce-Arrow which he had and that he transferred the tags to it from an old car which he shoved into the river, near his home here.

An effort is also being made to connect Morris with holding up and robbing the Rev. Paul R. Ronge here on Saturday before Easter. Rev. Ronge was held up, robbed and locked in a closet in the Zion Lutheran Church here on the Saturday previous to Easter.

The Bristol pastor was taken to Philadelphia yesterday and partly identified Morris. He says that Morris walks like the man who robbed him and in other ways resembles him with the exception of his eyebrows, which are lighter.

Morris was never accepted in Bristol society circles. In fact very few people here knew him, just a neighbor or two and those tradesmen with whom he came into contact.

NO NATIONALISM IN STYLES

Fascist dressmakers of Italy are trying to foist fashions of domestic design on Italian women. Previous efforts to make them give up allegiance to Parisian styles have been fruitless, but now the revolt against foreign styles is on in earnest.

Some time ago there was an appeal to Italian women to wear longer and fuller frocks. The reason was that present fashions require skirts so skimpy that very little silk is required to make them, and in consequence mills were being shut down for lack of orders.

Apparently this appeal to patriotism and business sense was not properly answered, for now the embattled countries are declaring that there ought to be a law against French styles. They propose to ask the government to prohibit exhibitions by foreign dress houses in fashionable hotels, and also to prevent Italian firms from sending buyers to Paris to import the latest models.

It is doubtful if a ban on the import of foreign styles will work any better in Italy than its sister doctrine has in America. The scanty frock of "bootleg" origin would have ten times the appeal of a government-approved costume. Prices of contraband clothes would no doubt soar to great heights, and their vogue would increase proportionately. The well-dressed woman would refuse to wear anything but costumes from over the border.

They have a different way of doing it in the United States. When American women began using less cloth in each costume the manufacturers boosted the prices and persuaded each customer to buy more dresses.

CONGRESS OPPORTUNITY

Congress is debating whether it should appropriate $1,500,000 for the purchase of the Voltaire collection of 3,000 fifteenth century books, including the finest specimen of the Gutenberg Bible now in existence.

It is not a question of worth. Experts say collectors would pay more than the price asked of the government. The Gutenberg Bible alone, the only three-volume set of that first masterful printing that has come down to this generation, is valued at $1,000,000 leaving $500,000 for the other 2,999 books among which are such priceless treasures as the celebrated letter of Columbus to the Queen of Spain and early printed editions of Caesar, Homer, Horace, Cicero and Livy.

Congress hesitates to feel on public opinion. Its members are uncertain how the constituents will take to book collecting on such costly scale. One thing is foreboded, that a storm of protest will rise up to haunt congress if this rare opportunity to enrich the library of congress is forfeited.

There are precedents for rejecting the offer. An historic one was the failure of congress to provide $1,000,000 for the purchase of the original copy of Washington's "Farewell Address," which was snapped up by a private collector for twice that sum.

Another thing that seldom turns out as you expected is the woman drive.

SYNOPSIS

David Wade and Stella Blackney, having fled from her brutal husband in name only, O'Shane, to a South Sea Island are happy until Moira, a half-caste girl, falls in love with David and tries to get him away from Stella. After a quarrel, Stella is carried out to sea in an ancient boat. David, recognizing at last that Stella means everything to him, sets out in a cutter to rescue her and meets O'Shane coming to reclaim her and for revenge. Stella has been stolen by head-hunters and the men compose their differences and go in search of her. They find her held a prisoner by Kapa, chief of the head-hunters, who intends to marry her in revenge for his ill-treatment by the whites.

"That would be a damn-fool thing to do," he said. "No good tryin' to rush him. I said that from the start." He was speaking quite coolly. "It's no use stayin' here. I'm goin' back to me boat."

"You're giving in?" cried Wade. "It's the only thing you can do," said Kapa. "Tomorrow night I'm taking her to my mountain village and going to marry her there. I've kept her for that. I haven't touched her yet. I'm keeping her for marriage. Oh, a great marriage it will be! They're making ready up there in the mountains now for it, and as soon as they're ready we will go. Tomorrow night I take her up there! A great marriage, native-fashion, with feasting and dancing and all the rest of it! She don't mean anything to me—as a woman. It's only that she's white! One of the race that treated me like a bit of dirt! How does that sound to you, white men?"

O'Shane shook his fist at the man on the platform, then signaled to his crew-boys and turned to Wade. "What sort of a swine do you think I'd be to give in?" he said in a tone that was vibrantly intense despite that it was hardly louder than a whisper. "Leave my Stella, my little, brown-haired Stella in that devil's hands! See here, my boy! I'm goin' to do it—somehow! Let 'em think I'm givin' in. I'll be all the better. It's no use stayin' here. I'm goin' aboard my schooner to think out a plan. Givin' in! By God, I'm not! Even if it costs my life! If y' knew how I loved her, y' wouldn't talk about me givin' in!"

There was courage and determination in his tone, and his lips were tightly set. It came to Wade with tremendous force that the speaker of those words might have been a scoundrel, but there was no doubt whatever that he was a brave man and a splendid lover.

"The only way is to beat him by strategy," O'Shane added, and, with his crew-boys about him, went down to his small boat.

Wade had forced himself to a comparative calmness. Strategy! The word had impressed itself deeply upon him. On the face of it, Kapa was more likely to be outwitted by strategy than by any storming tactics.

Dolobe, beside him, was showing uneasiness at the fact that there were now only two of them among all these savages. Wade paid him no heed. Kapa called jeeringly to O'Shane as the latter's small-boat made its smooth way across the water.

"I'll tell your wife you were here! She'll be glad to know you were so close! Oh, very glad!" Wade paid him no heed, either. Strategy! He repeated inwardly. He looked about him.

He took in the position of the Sacred House, its relation to the beach, the swamp, and the other houses. If only he could get in there unobserved, he thought, under cover of the night, say, and get to Stella's side! It would make all the difference.

He looked again at the swamp. And then the idea flashed upon him that he could approach the village from there. In the darkness of the night he could row ashore to a point some distance from the village, leave the boat, and make his way on foot through the swamp. Once in the village, he would trust to luck and the inspiration and contingencies of the moment for getting within the Sacred House.

"I'll do it!" he said to himself. Then, ignoring Kapa and the jeers Kapa called after him, he turned and, with Dolobe, went to the small-boat and returned to the cutter.

CHAPTER XVII

At a meal of sorts in the cabin—he was in no humor for eating, and ate only in order, to maintain his strength for the task before him—he related to Moira and Lo-oro all that had happened ashore, and told what he proposed to do. Then he went on to deck to await the coming of the time to make his attempt to reach Stella's side.

The women joined him. Lo-oro to sit with her head in her hands and never speaking, Moira to the back in a deck-chair and, for the greater part, stare across the darkness of the sea.

"It's too dangerous," she said once.

"Dangerous for Stella—" said Wade.

"I mean for you. Is there no other way?"

"None that I can see."

"There must be! There must! The risk for you is too great, David!"

He moved away from her, fearing she would set out upon a campaign of trying to dissuade him. But she said no more, and resumed her staring across the sea.

At half-past two he hauled the small-boat alongside and, after examining his revolver, prepared to get down over the side.

"Oh, my dear, be careful!" came Moira's whispered voice. "I shall be so very anxious—" She came to him, with outstretched arms. She was trembling. He feared she was about to kiss him.

"I'll be careful," he whispered back, and went quickly down into the boat.

The point of the beach upon which he had decided to land was not so easy to find as he had thought. In the darkness all of the shore seemed the same. There was just the long blur of it. Even now and then he rested on the oars, turned his head and studied the land.

The shore showed up suddenly, as is the manner of objects encountered on nights as dark as this. The boat grounded. Wade lay on the oars and listened. There was still no sound in the night. The full tide lay motionlessly in against the mangrove roots. He calculated he was less than a half mile from the village. Cautiously he stepped out into shin-deep water and made the boat fast to a tree. Then he waded in among the mangroves a little way.

The mangrove-roots stood hooped above the water to the height of his knees. He climbed on one and, clinging to the trunk of the tree, felt with his other foot for a progressive foothold. Finding it, he brought both feet on to it, and felt for the next foothold. It was the only means by which a mangrove swamp could be traversed, and his progress was slow.

Presently he became aware of all manner of noises. The swamp seemed to have wakened into life. Far to the left a night-bird made a crying like the crying of a fretful child.

Then when, by his more or less inadequate calculation, he had covered half of the distance to the village, there came a sound different from the others—the sound of a heavy boat striking the water from no great height. He stopped, standing on a root and clinging to the tree from which it grew.

"A man!" he breathed.

He cursed inwardly, telling himself he might have known that Kapa would not leave this approach to the village unguarded. Assuredly Kapa was cunning!

ed her sweater. George J. Sang, an employee, stated that Thomas proached him and asked him to go on a strike and that he refused cause he did not think the union rkers had a just claim to go out on strike.

Albert C. Kanfman, Sr., who lives yards from the mill, said that the ion and language used by the ing women picketers and the men s disgraceful. He said that he had shoot his revolver out the window scare a large crowd away on one asion when they threw stones.

esse C. Everitt, of Hulmeville, tested that he has seen pickets on duty the mill and has heard much slan-ish talk.

aymond Thomas was then called the first defense witness. He is airman of the shop committee and e of the strikers. He stated that ust Pross, the owner of the mill, proached him and informed him it he must purchase more stock in a mill or lose his job. He denied it he had said that the men working are now should be killed. Thomas ted that he and Pross were discuss- a settlement of the affairs and that oss told him that he could not lay the help there now because they ick to him during the strike. Pross, said, refused to divide up the work. omas said that he then made the tement to Pross that "If the men the shop were not men enough to ide up the work with former em- ployees their lives should be risked." Thomas told the Court that the pick- did only "peaceful picketing," two two and not on private property. at is the only method used to try to event workers from going to work, said.

"There was stone throwing but not the picketers," Thomas testified. he stones were thrown by the Phila- lphia gangs that came to Hulmeville several occasions."

Florence Pfeffer, a striker, said she d been employed at the mill for ree years until she was locked out. e is a stockholder.

"It was my duty to go peaceful pick- ing in front of the mill after I had en locked out," she said. "I received letter to come back to work but I d not go. As a picket I simply alked back and forth in front of the ill with other pickets."

Raymond Good, secretary of the outh Langhorne union branch, testi- ed that in March four men were dis- arged from the mill because they would not purchase stock in the firm. He stated that the union help tried through the mill owners to have the men taken back but that no agreement could be reached. Finally, he said, the mill was shut down and other employees were hired, all of them non-union.

Strikers who were formerly em- ployed at the plant, all of whom are union members, testified that they did not throw stones as pickets but simply carried on a peaceful picketing policy in an effort to keep other people from going to the mill to get work. Among those who testified were Dorothy Dick- en, Catherine Polsenberg, Winifred A. Dicken, Elsie Mae Dunkley, Anna Boris, Marie McCarthy and Isabel B. Carrell.

Miss Boris testified that the mill ownership discriminated against the

NO NATIONALISM IN STYLES

Fascist dressmakers of Italy are trying to foist fashions of domestic design on Italian women. Previous efforts to make them give up allegiance to Parisian styles have been fruitless, but now the revolt against foreign styles is on in earnest.

Some time ago there was an appeal to Italian women to wear longer and fuller frocks. The reason was that present fashions require skirts so skimpy that very little silk is required to make them, and in consequence mills were being shut down for lack of orders.

Apparently this appeal to patriotism and business sense was not properly answered, for now the embattled countries are declaring that there ought to be a law against French styles. They propose to ask the government to prohibit exhibitions by foreign dress houses in fashionable hotels, and also to prevent Italian firms from sending buyers to Paris to import the latest models.

It is doubtful if a ban on the import of foreign styles will work any better in Italy than its sister doctrine has in America. The scanty frock of "bootleg" origin would have ten times the appeal of a government-approved costume. Prices of contraband clothes would no doubt soar to great heights, and their vogue would increase proportionately. The well-dressed woman would refuse to wear anything but costumes from over the border.

They have a different way of doing it in the United States. When American women began using less cloth in each costume the manufacturers boosted the prices and persuaded each customer to buy more dresses.

CONGRESS' OPPORTUNITY

Congress is debating whether it should appropriate $1,500,000 for the purchase of the Voltaire collection of 3,000 fifteenth century books, including the finest specimen of the Gutenberg Bible now in existence.

It is not a question of worth. Experts say collectors would pay more than the price asked of the government. The Gutenberg Bible alone, the only three-volume set of that first masterful printing that has come down to this generation, is valued at $1,000,000 leaving $500,000 for the other 2,999 books among which are such priceless treasures as the celebrated letter of Columbus to the Queen of Spain and early printed editions of Caesar, Homer, Horace, Cicero and Livy.

Congress hesitates to feel on public opinion. Its members are uncertain how the constituents will take to book collecting on such costly scale. One thing is foreordained, that a storm of protest will rise up to haunt congress if this rare opportunity to enrich the library of congress is forfeited.

There are precedents for rejecting the offer. An historic one was the failure of congress to provide $1,000 for the purchase of the original copy of Washington's "Farewell Address," which was snapped up by a private collector for twice that sum.

Another thing that seldom turns out as you expected is the woman drive.

Dolobe, beside him, was showing uneasiness at the fact that there were now only two of them among all these savages. Wade paid him no heed. Kapa called jeeringly to O'Shane as the latter's small-boat made its smooth way across the water.

"I'll tell your wife you were here! She'll be glad to know you were so close! Oh, very glad!" Wade paid him no heed, either. Strategy! he repeated inwardly. He looked about him.

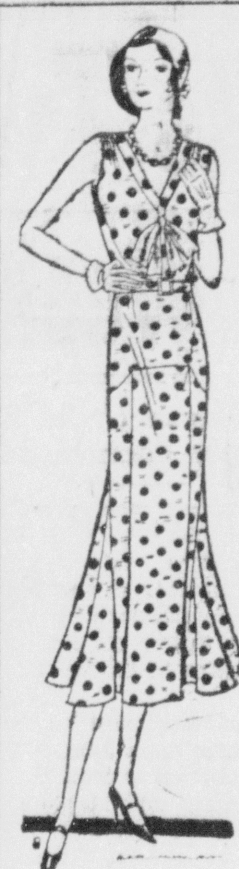

He took in the position of the Sacred House, its relation to the beach, the swamp, and the other houses. If only he could get in there unobserved, he thought, under cover of the night, say, and get Stella's side! It would make all the difference.

He looked again at the swamp. And then the idea flashed upon him that he could approach the village from there. In the darkness of the night he could row ashore to a point some distance from the village, leave the boat, and make his way on foot through the swamp. Once in the village, he would trust to luck and the inspiration and contingencies of the ripped her sweater. George J. Sangpiel, an employee, stated that Thomas approached him and asked him to go out on a strike and that he refused because he did not think the union workers had a just claim to go out on a strike.

Albert C. Kaufman, Sr., who lives 70 yards from the mill, said that the action and language used by the young women picketers and the men was disgraceful. He said that he had to shoot his revolver out the window to scare a large crowd away on one occasion when they threw stones.

Jesse C. Everitt, of Hulmeville, testified that he has seen pickets on duty at the mill and has heard much slanderous talk.

Raymond Thomas was then called as the first defense witness. He is chairman of the shop committee and one of the strikers. He stated that August Pross, the owner of the mill, approached him and informed him that he must purchase more stock in the mill or lose his job. He denied that he had said that the men working there now should be killed. Thomas stated that he and Pross were discussing a settlement of the affairs and that Pross told him that he could not lay off the help there now because they stuck to him during the strike. Pross, he said, refused to divide up the work. Thomas said that he then made the statement to Pross that "if the men in the shop were not men enough to divide up the work with former employees their lives should be risked."

Thomas told the court that the pickets did only "peaceful picketing," two by two and not on private property. That is the only method used to try to prevent workers from going to work, he said.

"There was stone throwing but not by the picketers," Thomas testified. "The stones were thrown by the Philadelphia gangs that came to Hulmeville on several occasions."

Florence Pfeffer, a striker, said she had been employed at the mill for three years until she was locked out. She is a stockholder.

"It was my duty to do peaceful picketing in front of the mill after I had been locked out," she said. "I received a letter to come back to work but I did not go. As a picket I simply walked back and forth in front of the mill with other pickets."

Raymond Good, secretary of the South Langhorne union branch, testified that in March four men were discharged from the mill because they would not purchase stock in the firm. He stated that the union help tried through the mill owners to have the men taken back but that no agreement could be reached. Finally, he said, the mill was shut down and other employees were hired, all of them non-union.

Strikers who were formerly employed at the plant, all of whom are union members, testified that they did not throw stones as pickets but simply carried on a peaceful picketing policy in an effort to keep other people from going to the mill to get work. Among those who testified were Dorothy Dicken, Catherine Polsenberg, Winifred A. Dicken, Elsie Mae Dunkley, Anna Boris, Marie McCarthy and Isabella B. Carrell.

Miss Boris testified that the mill ownership discriminated against the

Between dancing to jazz and dodging automobiles, this generation has many opportunities for neutral sprees.

"No, lady, a meadow lark is not a party thrown in the country."

Helen—I fear I have made a mistake.

Ruth—Why?
"Jack proposed in a taxi cab. The minute I accepted he paid the fare and we got out and walked."

"TAKE THAT AND THAT, YOU DOG!" denounced CRUSHER KAZOULIAN

"Even a cauliflower ear can stand just so much—the dreary din of your fog-horn voice goads me to violence."

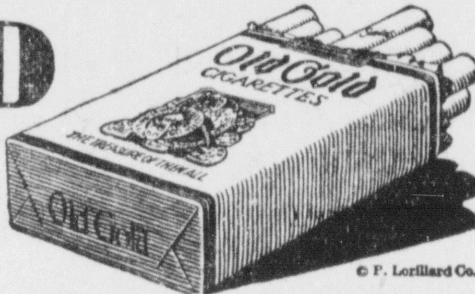

"Blow the boloney, bozo," rasped Wire-nail Welch, his opponent. "Do I get a return match?"

"What good is any kind of a match to you, you blighter? Unless you let the honey-smooth heart-leaf tobacco one-two that yowl and K. O. that cracked yelp, by the pearl buttons on the left spat of Bill Bendigo, your ring career is over. The next match you get, Palooka, use it to light up an OLD GOLD. There's not a squawk in a stackful!"

The basis of leadership

READ again the familiar message on the back of the Camel package. . . Camel, introduced in 1913, when other cigarette brands were offering all sorts of premiums and similar inducements, jumped into leadership solely on the basis of its built-in goodness.

That statement, spread throughout the world each day on millions upon millions of Camel packages, stands as your guarantee of the maximum in smoke pleasure. It reaffirms on every package of Camels the steadfast aim to give smokers a cigarette in which every possible bit of the cost is put into real smoke-quality.

The delightful, natural fragrance of Camel's choicer tobaccos, combined in the smooth, mellow harmony of a blend beyond imitation—that's what made Camel the world's foremost cigarette—and keeps it just that.
